The Power of Preventive Care

Benjamin Franklin once said that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. It can actually be worth a lot more than that when you factor in employee productivity, too.

Presenteeism with employees, when they show up for work sick or in pain, can cost you up to three times more than absenteeism, according to the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Providing employee benefit plans that encourage preventive care, like dental and vision plans, can help your employees improve their overall health and help them be there for you.

Americans get an annual medical exam – only half get the preventive screenings you’d expect.²

Our president and CEO, Dr. Phil Wenk, recently talked with the Nashville Business Journal about “The Importance of Preventive Care” and “The Costs of Presenteeism.” Listen to those conversations now:
